So, I thought, that I should give you a little bit more hints/information about Vivado Design.You may have seen a recent article about "Bears of the World" in Prospect Magazine by Gina Trapani titled "Wolves of the World." It was an insightful piece exploring the link between the North American wilderness and our global impact. I was inspired to create my own story about humans and animals, just about like Gina's. Here it is: The Wild: Beasts We Know and Beasts We Shouldn't Know by Dave Koza Watching it all unfold, she felt lost and bewildered. In stark contrast to the elegant, snarling, staring beast, the coyotes seemed so soft, cute even. Realizing that she was alone, they had approached her. They were so trusting of her. Hanging out by the stream, it was a bright and sunny, hot summer day. A rare afternoon to be out of the house, for just this short while. Suddenly, she got a bad feeling that she was being watched. Her subtle, pensive eyes peered all around. She started to back up slowly. They were getting closer, she could almost make out their features. But she was so petrified she couldn't turn her head. Gripping her camera, she saw the coyotes' backs twitch. They seemed to be sizing her up. Turning away, she ran to the edge of the water, not noticing the angry metallic sound of branches snapping under her feet. She tripped, fumbling to keep the camera balanced in front of her. She landed on the soft dry earth by the stream and froze, waiting for the next sound. The other coyotes moved in. Everything was silent. Crouched there, she felt her breath escaping her frozen body. Her pulse raced. In the stillness of her heart, she felt the pounding of her heart, beating like a drum. The wind had carried away
